dynamic concept that includes subjective social and psychological dimensions as well as health related behaviors. The Ryff scales of psychological well-being, the factor structure of Ryff's scales of psychological well-being (SPWB) and their relationship to standardized measures of subjective well-being (SWB) were investigated. Two hundred seventy-seven individuals were assessed. An assessment of the construct validity of Ryff's scales of psychological well-being was conducted. Carol Ryff's model of psychological well-being differs from past models in one important way: well-being is multidimensional and not merely about happiness or positive emotions. A good life is balanced and whole, engaging each of the different aspects of well-being instead of being narrowly focused. Sense of well-being satisfaction and the good life for a human being refers to the factors that contribute most to a well-lived and fulfilling life (Compton, 2005). These factors are one of the objectives of research within positive psychology. Psychological well-being is a theory of positive psychological functioning. Ryff's Psychological Well-being Scale (RPWB) was used for all scales ranging from 1 (totally disagree) to 6 (totally agree). Two results were obtained: 1) Factorial validity-the factorial validity of the scales of psychological well-being was tested with confirmatory factor analysis using Mplus 4.2 (Muthén & Muthén, 2006). The items were new measures of well-being when examining the standard scales for assessing well-being. We were impressed with the need for measurement scales in several domains-positive and negative emotions, positive thinking, and a brief scale of psychological well-being (Diener, 2000). This study investigated the validity and reliability of the Turkish version of the scales of psychological well-being (Ryff, 1989). The sample of the study consists of 1214 university students.
